“Education is the key. If they know about their disease and medications, it’s easier for them to understand and follow our recommendations.”

About Marlon Argueta, MD

Dr. Marlon Argueta vowed to dedicate his life to helping sick people after losing his mother to cancer. He is passionate about caring for the senior population and loves the opportunity to “educate patients about their diseases.” He explains, “Education is the key. If they know about their disease and medications, it’s easier for them to understand and follow our recommendations.” He wants his patients to feel like they are equals and always “treats them with respect.” To keep up with the latest medical advancements, he often reads and listens to podcasts.

Dr. Argueta enjoys hiking and connecting with nature in his spare time. He also likes playing video games, which he says has helped him with “fine touch and navigation” skills.
