

“My favorite part of being a physician is working with patients and their families in order to create positive changes in their physical and mental health.”

About Laura Jarrell, MD

Dr. Laura Jarrell’s interest in becoming a physician started while studying biology in college. “I had the opportunity to shadow a family medicine physician and felt inspired by the positive impact a physician can have on their patients,” she explains. She enjoys learning about her patients’ lives and wants them to know that she “sees them as a human being and not just a patient or number on my list.” She explains that her favorite part of being a physician “is working with patients and their families in order to create positive changes in their physical and mental health.”

In her free time, Dr. Jarrell enjoys hiking, doing pilates, and spending time with her husband and kids. She also enjoys reading about true crime stories.
