“I hope the impact I have is that my patients feel valued, understood, and genuinely cared for — not just treated.”

About Susana Collins, MD

Susana Collins was destined for medicine from an early age. As a first-generation physician, her journey began with toy medical kits and a microscope gifted by her mother — and was shaped by watching her mother work as a home health aide with the senior population. "This experience shaped my commitment to providing thoughtful, respectful care to seniors and advocating for their well-being," she says. Her mother remains her greatest inspiration, teaching her that trust is built through consistency, empathy, and genuine presence.

Dr. Collins believes great care goes beyond treating medical conditions — it's about making patients feel heard, respected, and genuinely cared for. She takes time to understand each patient's personal history, involves them in their care, and advocates for their needs by coordinating care and addressing barriers. "I hope the impact I have is that my patients feel valued, understood, and genuinely cared for — not just treated," she says.

When not with patients, Dr. Collins enjoys exploring museums, parks, and new restaurants, expressing her creativity through painting, ceramics, and cooking, and unwinding with a good book or movie. Above all, she cherishes time spent with family.
