“Family medicine drew me in because it means caring for the whole person.”

About Daniel Arrabi, MD

Dr. Daniel Arrabi pursued medicine to build a career of purpose — one centered on real relationships and lasting impact. "Family medicine drew me in because it means caring for the whole person," he says. He feels most called working with seniors, where he focuses on staying ahead of complex health needs and helping patients maintain their independence and quality of life. "I love the challenge of building genuine trust over time," he says.

Dr. Arrabi builds relationships through consistent, attentive care — listening closely, involving patients in their decisions, and explaining things in plain language. "That reliability is what turns a doctor's visit into a real partnership," he says. His greatest reward? "The patient who stays in their home longer, keeps their routine, and feels like someone genuinely has their back."
