“I hope to be a little light in their day.”

About Tracy Richardson, NP

Tracy Richardson was called to serve the senior population out of a deep conviction that older adults are too often overlooked and underserved. "Society treats them as if they are a burden and a drain on the economy," she says. "I wanted to make a difference for them." A self-described person, Tracy brings warmth and genuine presence to every patient encounter. Her approach is simple but powerful — she listens. "Many of our patients just want to be heard," she says. Above all, Tracy hopes to bring a little brightness to her patients' days. "I hope to be a little light in their day," she says. When not with patients, Tracy has a deep love for the arts — theater, music, and visual art all hold a special place in her heart.
