“I like to laugh with my patients when I can — it helps us remember our common humanity.”

About Jordan Clear, DO

Dr. Jordan Clear believes that God gives everyone different gifts — and his is the ability to empathize. "No one can walk a mile in another person's shoes, but that doesn't mean you shouldn't try," he says. Both of his grandmothers were beacons of light in his life, while his grandfathers struggled with serious health problems before he could truly know them. That experience drives his passion for senior care. "The more good days that we can give them, the more that they can teach us," he says. A love of science and chemistry drew him to medicine, where he could leverage both empathy and intellect in service of those in need.

Dr. Clear brings a refreshing warmth to his practice — and a healthy dose of laughter. "Medicine is already plenty serious with all of the white coats and fluorescent lights," he says. "I like to laugh with my patients when I can — it helps us remember our common humanity." As a primary care physician with a passion for musculoskeletal medicine, he is a firm believer that movement is medicine. "Every ache and pain is an important piece of a puzzle if it's keeping someone from living the life they want to live," he says. He treats every patient as if they were his own mom or dad. "I'm honored when they trust me enough to be their primary care physician," he says.

When not with patients, Dr. Clear loves going on long runs, discovering new restaurants with his wife Amy, listening to music "that stopped being cool twenty years ago," and spending time with his two little girls.
