About Jessie Richeme, DNP, MSN-FNP-BC, RN-BSN, CRRN

Jessie "Jess" Richeme, was inspired to pursue medicine by a deep desire to help others during their most vulnerable moments. "Seeing the impact that compassionate and skilled healthcare providers can have on patients and their families motivated me to dedicate myself to this profession," she says. Jess chose to work with the senior population out of a deep respect for the wisdom, resilience, and life experiences that older adults bring. "Seniors have contributed so much to their families and communities, and I find it rewarding to help them maintain their health, independence, and quality of life," she says.

Jess builds relationships through trust, respect, and genuine empathy — taking time to truly listen and understand each patient as an individual, not just a medical condition. Her approach centers on prevention, education, and proactive chronic disease management, empowering patients to feel actively involved in their care. "Good medicine is not only about treating a condition — it is about building trust, providing reassurance, and caring for the whole person," she says.

When not with patients, Jess cherishes every moment with her four college-aged children. She also enjoys reading, going to the movies, and cruising — a favorite way to unwind, explore new places, and create lasting memories with loved ones.
