“My goal is for you to leave every visit feeling heard and with a clear plan.”

About Nicholas Stagliano, MD

Dr. Nicholas Stagliano has loved science and figuring out how things work since he was young — and medicine was a natural fit. What drew him to primary care was the opportunity to build real, long-term relationships with patients. "Caring for seniors is one of the best ways to do that, and it's where I feel I can help people who truly need it," he says. He gets to know each patient by learning what matters most to them — their goals, their routines, and what a good day looks like. "Primary care should be built around those things," he says.

Dr. Stagliano helps manage both ongoing conditions and sudden health problems with one clear goal — keeping patients well enough to keep doing what they love. "For many of my patients, that means staying independent, active, and connected to the people and activities that matter to them," he says. He views primary care as a true partnership. “My goal is for you to leave every visit feeling heard and with a clear plan."

When not with patients, Dr. Stagliano loves cooking, tending his garden, and enjoying card games, board games, and video games with his wife, two kids, and extended family in Jacksonville.
