“I became a strong advocate for the senior population, recognizing that many older adults lack consistent representation and support in navigating their care.”

About Andrea Delumpa, MD

Dr. Andrea Delumpa, MD has always been driven to serve underserved communities. "Medicine offers a unique intersection of the sciences and the humanities," she says. During her training in family medicine, she found herself consistently drawn to populations that are often overlooked — including women, immigrants, global communities, and older adults. "I became a strong advocate for the senior population, recognizing that many older adults lack consistent representation and support in navigating their care," she says. That advocacy grew into a genuine passion for working with and championing older adults every day.

Dr. Delumpa builds relationships by being fully present and genuinely interested in her patients — listening not just to their medical concerns, but to the personal challenges they bring through the door. Her goal is straightforward and sincere. "They always have someone in their corner and someone willing to advocate for their needs and health," she says.

When not with patients, Dr. Delumpa enjoys Pilates, working out, dancing, reading, and spending time with friends and family over dinner.
